Please join us to remember your loved ones this Christmas.

This year, Joan Hill will be remembering her daughter, Karen. Here, she tells us why the Hospice holds a special place in her heart.

Joan's daughter, Karen, was originally diagnosed with breast cancer in 2012. Some three years later, Karen's health deteriorated and she was in a great deal of pain. She was admitted to the Hospice to get her pain under control. She was able to return home on several occasions, with Joan looking after her.

Eventually, Karen told her Mum that she felt safer at the Hospice, and she wanted to return there for her care. Karen's eldest daughter, Freya, celebrated her 12th birthday at her Mum's side at the Hospice. Staff decorated the room, and the family all enjoyed what was to be their last celebration together. Just one week later, Karen sadly died aged just 38.

Joan says, "The Hospice were amazing from start to finish. Nothing was too much trouble for anyone. I know that we wouldn't have got through without the support we received. We brought Karen to the Hospice to allow her to live, and that is exactly what she did. We had everything we needed under one roof. We were even able to have complementary therapies in the Therapy Suite. If anyone is scared about being admitted to the Hospice, I would tell them not to be frightened. Karen died with dignity, and I will always be grateful to them for that."

Last Christmas Joan dedicated a light in memory of Karen. She explains "Light up a Life was a great way for us to remember Karen, especially as it was our first Christmas without her. It was also a way for us to support the Hospice that had given her, and us, such exceptional care."

"We brought Karen to the Hospice to allow her to live, and that is exactly what she did."
